

NEW GENERATION OF DESIGN

COLORADO INTERIORS

people

Aspen architecture evolves through a new generational lens.
by Linda Hayes

Architects do far more than shape the physical nature of a place—they reflect its very heart and soul. As has been the case since Aspen's early days—when influential architects Herbert Bayer, Fritz Benedict and others left their mark—the landscape of town, and its surrounding areas, is evolving through a new demographic perspective. Here, a half-dozen creatives share their views on elements of their profession.

BRYAN MAY, AIA, NCARB,
PRINCIPAL AND FOUNDER,
BRYAN MAY ARCHITECTURE
IN ASPEN

On starting his own firm "It was always on my mind. People were talking to me and encouraging me to take the leap, and there was a residential project for a family relocating to Aspen that gave me a good solid start. It was an opportunity I couldn't say no to; it's the type of home that architects dream of designing."

On listening "Architecture for so many years has been approached from a fairly top-down perspective, but the process is more interesting, rewarding and compelling if you open the dialogue, bringing everyone to the table and listening to their perspective. It's the only way to truly innovate."

On his focus "I thought I would end up getting a lot more residential work based on past projects, and that's still my primary focus. But I'm quickly starting to cross over to some corporate, industrial and cultural work. It's exciting what's come my way."
bryanmayarchitecture.com

Bryan May recently started his own firm and is working on a residential project in the West End.

PHOTO BY ALEXIS ANIELING

MODERN LUXURY

ASPEN

MAGAZINE

MIDSUMMER 2019

The Influence of Art

+

The Works, People & Buildings That Impact Us

Rashid Johnson

ASPENMAGAZINE.COM

MODERN LUXURY

Interiors

COLORADO

CHROMATIC SCALE

AN ARTFUL HOME IS REIMAGINED

A RIVERSIDE CABIN REDUX, POWDER ROOM ENVY &
ONE SNOWMASS, TWO DESIGNS

